The Art and Scandalous Lives of the Bloomsbury Group

The art of the three main 'Bloomsbury' artists (Duncan Grant, Vanessa Bell and Roger Fry) cannot be separated from their astonishing lives. They, along with their literary and other intellectual companions (Virginia Woolf, Lytton Strachey and John Maynard Keynes, amongst others) were part of a movement, the popular name for which became widely used only after the death of around half its members.

This lecture reviews their intertwined relationships and covers the so-called 'Art-quake of 1910', when Roger Fry, assisted by Virginia's husband, the art critic and writer, Clive Bell, mounted the Manet and the Post-Impressionists exhibition at the Grafton Galleries in London.

Antony Penrose

Picasso, Man Ray and Max Ernst through the eyes of Lee Miller and Roland Penrose

A personal profile of giant figures in 20th century art. Picasso, Man Ray and Max Ernst were three of the key artists of the 20th century. They were also close friends of the Surrealist photographer Lee Miller and the Surrealist artist Roland Penrose. This is the hidden part of the story of a unique friendship which spanned the Surrealist movement and the last 30 years of Picasso's life. It is told by Antony Penrose who witnessed some of the events himself, using the words and images of those who were there. • Contains war and holocaust images that are highly disturbing.

Antony Gormley: A Body of Work

(postponed from May 2020)

Antony Gormley's career spans nearly 40 years, during which time he has made sculpture that explores the relationship of the human body to space, often using his own body as his starting point. His work has been shown throughout the world, in galleries including the Tate in London and the Hermitage in St Petersburg, but is also often on open display, as public art, such as Another Place at Crosby Beach, near Liverpool. As well as works that he is well known for, like the iconic Angel of the North, this lecture will look at some of his earlier and less well-known works, to give an overall view of the development of his work across his whole career, up to the present time.

Packing up the Nation: Storing Art Before the Nazi Invasion

(postponed from April 2020)

This is the gripping and sometimes hilarious story of how a band of heroic curators and eccentric custodians saved Britain's national heritage during our Darkest Hour. As Hitler's forces gathered on the other side of the Channel to threaten these islands, men and women from London's national museums, galleries and archives forged extraordinary plans to evacuate their collections to safety. Utilising country houses from Buckinghamshire to Cumbria, tube tunnels, Welsh mines and Wiltshire quarries, a dedicated team of unlikely heroes packed up their greatest treasures in a race against time during the sweltering summer of 1939, dispatching them throughout the country on a series of secret wartime adventures, retold in this talk.

Utility, Post-war Design and the Festival of Britain (c.1939 – 1960)

The war years brought innovations that we now all recognize as key practices in competitive markets: limited variety, low-cost materials and streamlining. Some utility designs in furniture still stand up to scrutiny. The place of the industrial designer was clearly stated in this period and played a key part in the decorative style of the 1950s, when new technologies such as x-ray crystallography influenced product design. Exploring major UK exhibitions such as Britain Can Make It, 1946, and the Festival of Britain in 1951, this lecture highlights key characteristics of period style.

Full lecture 'A touch of the sun'

The oddest 'star' in opera is the Sun. Its appearance in The Magic Flute triggers the finale when everybody dances off bathed in happy, rational daylight. But other operas are more wary about the heat. It's the baking sun that precipitates the disastrous passions in Carmen and Aida, and what about that moment in the year when the sun is at its strongest? Midsummer itself. I'll be looking at operas like The Fairy Queen, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Faust, Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg and especially Lohengrin – all set at this odd time of the year, when quiet English woods and respectable German towns find themselves on the edge of fairyland.

The following have been deferred from 2020 into the next season. They have been provisionally booked but are subject to confirmation from lecturers.

Villas in Roman Britain -The Architecture and Art of a remote Roman province

The villas of Roman Britain exist in their hundreds but only a very few are visible today. Recorded and excavated from places as far apart as Devon and county Durham, these country houses range from modest farmhouses to palaces. Within a small number of exceptions most reached their largest extents and greatest level of decoration in the late third and fourth centuries. The villas were where the wealthiest displayed their status by investing in extravagant mosaics that depicted mythological and religious scenes alongside abstract motifs. Here they held court at the heart of their rural estates, capitalizing on their control of local politics and economies. This lecture looks at these monuments from a variety of angles and can usually be tailored to a particular region or locality.

The Genius of Raphael

This lecture charts the meteoric rise to prominence of the artist Raphael (1483-1520). In 1500, aged seventeen, Raphael entered the workshop of the successful Umbrian artist Pietro Perugino and so began his emergence as one of the greatest masters of the High Renaissance. While lacking his older rivals Leonardo da Vinci (1452-1519) and Michelangelo Buonarroti's (1475- 1564) advantage of being born and trained in Florence, he was generally admitted to be their equal. Raphael's early work is analysed alongside his commissions in Florence and for the Papacy in Rome which demonstrate the genius of his extraordinary talent.

A tour of Big Ben

Big Ben is one of the most iconic buildings in the world – it identifies the UK and democracy in the Western world. But there is a lot more to this tower than the beautiful external gothic architecture; and Tim will prove this to you. Using stunning images, he will take you on a virtual tour of the interior, saving you the effort of climbing 334 spiral stairs. He will explain the historical background and discuss the friction between the often-controversial personalities involved in the building and designing of the tower. Tim will then take you behind those magnificent clock faces; show and explain the workings of the enormous clock mechanism; before finally taking you into the belfry and presenting before you – Big Ben, the most famous bell in the world! After all that excitement Tim will ensure you safely descend the stairs ready for your well-earned cup of tea!

The Art of Snow and Ice: How artists transformed the winter landscape

The bleak midwinter held little appeal to the artist for many centuries until Bruegel's Hunters in the Snow in the 16th century. From pristine backdrop to the tempestuous snow storms of Turner to the capturing of 'snow effect' by the Impressionists, the ability of artists to convey snow as a symbol of peace but also of grandeur and terror is compelling.
